Joy MacDermid: keynote: ‘Hand therapy management of acute pain and chronic pain prevention’

Dr. Joy MacDermid is a Canadian physical therapist, hand therapist, epidemiologist and Professor of Physical Therapy at Western University and is also connected with the School of Rehabilitation Science at McMaster University.

She is also the Co-director of the Clinical Research Lab within the Hand and Upper Limb Centre in London, Ontario and is a Fellow of the Canadian Academy of Health Sciences. Her research projects address clinical questions related to enhancing prevention, assessment and management of musculoskeletal disorders and related work disability.

She is heavily engaged in training students and also mentors clinicians and junior faculty. Her teaching and research emphasizes evidence-based practice, clinical measurement, and knowledge translation. Dr MacDermid has published over 350 peer-reviewed papers and is co-editor of the textbook, Evidence-based Rehabilitation, which is used internationally to teach evidence-based practice. In hand therapy she is among other things known for developing the often used PRWHE wrist questionnaire.
